

Corsini's Point of the Week™

January 1, 2008

Title of Point Goes Here

This is our final POTW for 2007; we're going to take a little time off to focus on our faith and family. But before we go, let's conclude our discussion on how you can start this year to make next year The Year to Remember (in and out of your office).

We've talked about the value of getting an outside opinion to help you determine what you need to do more of, less of and when you need to stop what you're doing altogether.

We discussed using the time left at the end of this year to clean up, make up and finally get around to those things you've been neglecting.

Last week, we challenged you to think about your vision for your work and your life. What do you want to accomplish this upcoming year? What steps do you need to take to achieve your own brand of success? We encourage you to have a viable vision for your work—and for life outside the office. We discussed using the time left at the end of this year to clean up, make up and finally get around to those things you've been neglecting.

We've looked at fine-tuning your personal sonar and radar. You have to listen to yourself as well as your team. Trust your intuition, and live and work thoughtfully.
